

ON THE PUBLICATION OF THE ARS CONJECTANDI

Extract from a letter of Johann Bernoulli to Niklaus Bernoulli
15 July 1712?

Die Werke von Jacob Bernoulli, Vol. 3, p. 399.

“Mr. Christ will travel to Neuchâtel in the coming week, he should have the corrections of the treatise de arte conjectandi, thus the Venetian¹ sells to the Messers Thurneysen² to print, takes over himself, but because he now wants to go away, so he will, I mean, instruct this obligation to Mr. Bringolf;³ Something beautiful will come out, if neither the editor, nor the proof-reader, nor the printer understand nothing of the material, and it is without that an incomplete and truncated work; the Venetian has revealed to me nothing of his plan, but I am glad, also due to well-known causes nothing will mix me in it.”

Extract from Letter 147 of Varignon to Johann Bernoulli
17 March 1713.

Die Werke von Jacob Bernoulli, Vol. 3, p. 399.

“Apropos of this book, Mr. your Nephew has confirmed to me that which Mr. König had said to me a few days before, that one actually prints at Basel the book De arte conjectandi of the late Mr. your brother: I am delighted with it, it is perhaps that which makes Mr. de Montmort hasten to have his book reprinted. Whence therefore comes that you have said nothing to me of it? seeing that M. König has said to me that this book of the late Mr. your brother is under press for nearly three months. I know that you are not involved in it, & I am annoyed with it; because late Mr. your brother having not set the last hand, it is quite difficult that he had not some gaps, & many things that he would have corrected or changed, if he had lived. To your fault I would have strongly wished that Mr. your Nephew from here, had taken care of it, knowing from Basel only you two & Mr. Hermann proper to render this work correct, although there can be others who I know not. I am quite impatient to see this work.”

Extract from a letter of Johann Bernoulli to Varignon
29 April 1713.

Die Werke von Jacob Bernoulli, Vol. 3, p. 400.

“It is true that one prints the book de Arte conjectandi, it is also true that I have said nothing to You of it, but that You wish that I said to You of it, since You know as much as me of it: perhaps even that You know rather than me that this book was under press, because it is only recently that one has said to me that one printed this book, and that the impression of it was nearly achieved, my Nephew the Painter, that amiable child, having paid great attention, that one hid the secret from me, until the day of publication of the Translated by Richard J. Pulskamp, Department of Mathematics and Computer Science, Xavier University, Cincinnati OH, December 18, 2021.

¹Niklaus, son of Jakob, the youth called Painter, then living in Venice.

²Publisher of the Ars Conjectandi

³Supposed proof-reader of the Ars Conjectandi, since Mr. Christ is absent due to his departure for Neuchâtel.

book; you see, I pray You, the confidence that he has in me: You have reason to believe that it will have some gaps, because not only has the Author not set the last hand, but hardly he has achieved the half of his project, so that this will be a very defective and very incomplete work; for the exactitude of the impression. You will judge it when You will have seen it; however I am able to say to You that neither the bookseller, nor the printer, nor the proof-reader understands a drop of the material of which the book treats; perhaps that the clearness with which the late my brother had the custom to copy his writings, will supply in default of the ignorance of these people.”

Extract of Letter 2 from Varignon to Niklaus Bernoulli
May or June 1713

Die Werke von Jacob Bernoulli, Vol. 3, p. 400.

“I am impatient to see the book de arte conjectandi of the late Mr. his (Maler Nikl. d.J.) illustrious Father, who having not set the last hand, will have left without doubt some gaps and other negligences which could have had need by a man as able as Mr. your uncle today, or as you or as Mr. Hermann, in order to preside at the printing: At least before the book appears, you review the impression in order to mark in it the errata, to add the necessary clarifications, and a notice on that which the too premature death of its illustrious Author has not permitted him to set this work into the final perfection which he was capable of giving to it: You will carve from it thence the negligences which one will be able to find there, and you thus render service to the glory of which I am one of the most zealous defenders, and to the public.”

Extract from Letter 2 of Niklaus Bernoulli to Michelotti⁴
29 August 1713

Die Werke von Jacob Bernoulli, Vol. 3, p. 400.

“The book of the late my Uncle is finally exiting the press, . . . I have made a small preface at the urgent request of the Booksellers and of my Cousin. . . .”

Extract from Letter IV of Niklaus Bernoulli to Leibniz
9 September 1713 at Basel

Leibnizens mathematische Schriften, Bd. III, pp. 987–989

“I shall arrange besides, that the last post mortem Treatise de Arte Conjectandi of my father’s brother arrive to You, which recently escaped press.”

Extract from Letter 16 of Montmort to Niklaus Bernoulli
25 December 1713

Die Werke von Jacob Bernoulli, Vol. 3, p. 400.

“It is true, that which you say, that there are few things for us to learn, who have much thought in these matters. The book omits nothing from being excellent.”

⁴Pietro Antonio Michelotti (1673-1740), physician in Venice.